FOREWORD

The many lakes, ponds, reservoirs and impoundments of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts represent a considerable natural resource. These waterbodies are present in considerable numbers and encompass a wide diversity of forms in our environment. The true wealth which these waterbodies provide is measured in the myriad of potential uses which they offer to the residents of Massachusetts. These can range from industrial through recreational uses and may include power generation, cooling water, process water, fire protection, wastewater assimilation, irrigation supply, wildlife management, fishing, boating, swimming, skating, and aesthetics.

It is one of the primary responsibilities of the Massachusetts Division of Water Pollution Control (MDWPC) to monitor, regulate and report on the quality and condition of these waterbodies within Massachusetts (Ch. 21 MGL). In an effort to better serve this responsibility, the previous compilation report (1984) has been expanded to include latitude and longitude, where available; updated to incorporate new survey year listings; and revised to correct and clarify waterbody listings. Further updates of this report are anticipated periodically, as necessitated by changes in information.

ABSTRACT

An alphabetical listing, by drainage system and river basin, of approximately 3,000 waterbodies in Massachusetts was compiled from currently available information and verified from the most recent revision of published United States Geological Survey (USGS) topographic maps. Each of the 32 river basin and coastal drainage area listings of waterbodies is accompanied by a watershed map depicting both major water courses and waterbodies. These watershed maps also provide other pertinent information such as adjoining river basin and coastal drainage area divides, municipal and state boundaries and the location of the watershed within the state. Individual waterbodies are listed alphabetically within each river basin. These individual waterbody listings provide: the accepted name; the common name; an indication if there is more than one basin within the waterbody; the municipality(ies) where the waterbody can be found; a unique computer code number (PALIS number) used for data access; the latitude and longitude of the approximate center of the waterbody; the area of the waterbody; the map code used to identify the USGS map(s) on which the waterbody appears; and the year (if applicable) during which the waterbody was surveyed by the MDWPC, Technical Services Branch. Recognized Great Ponds are also noted. In addition an index is provided which links each municipality with its appropriate river basin(s).

INTRODUCTION

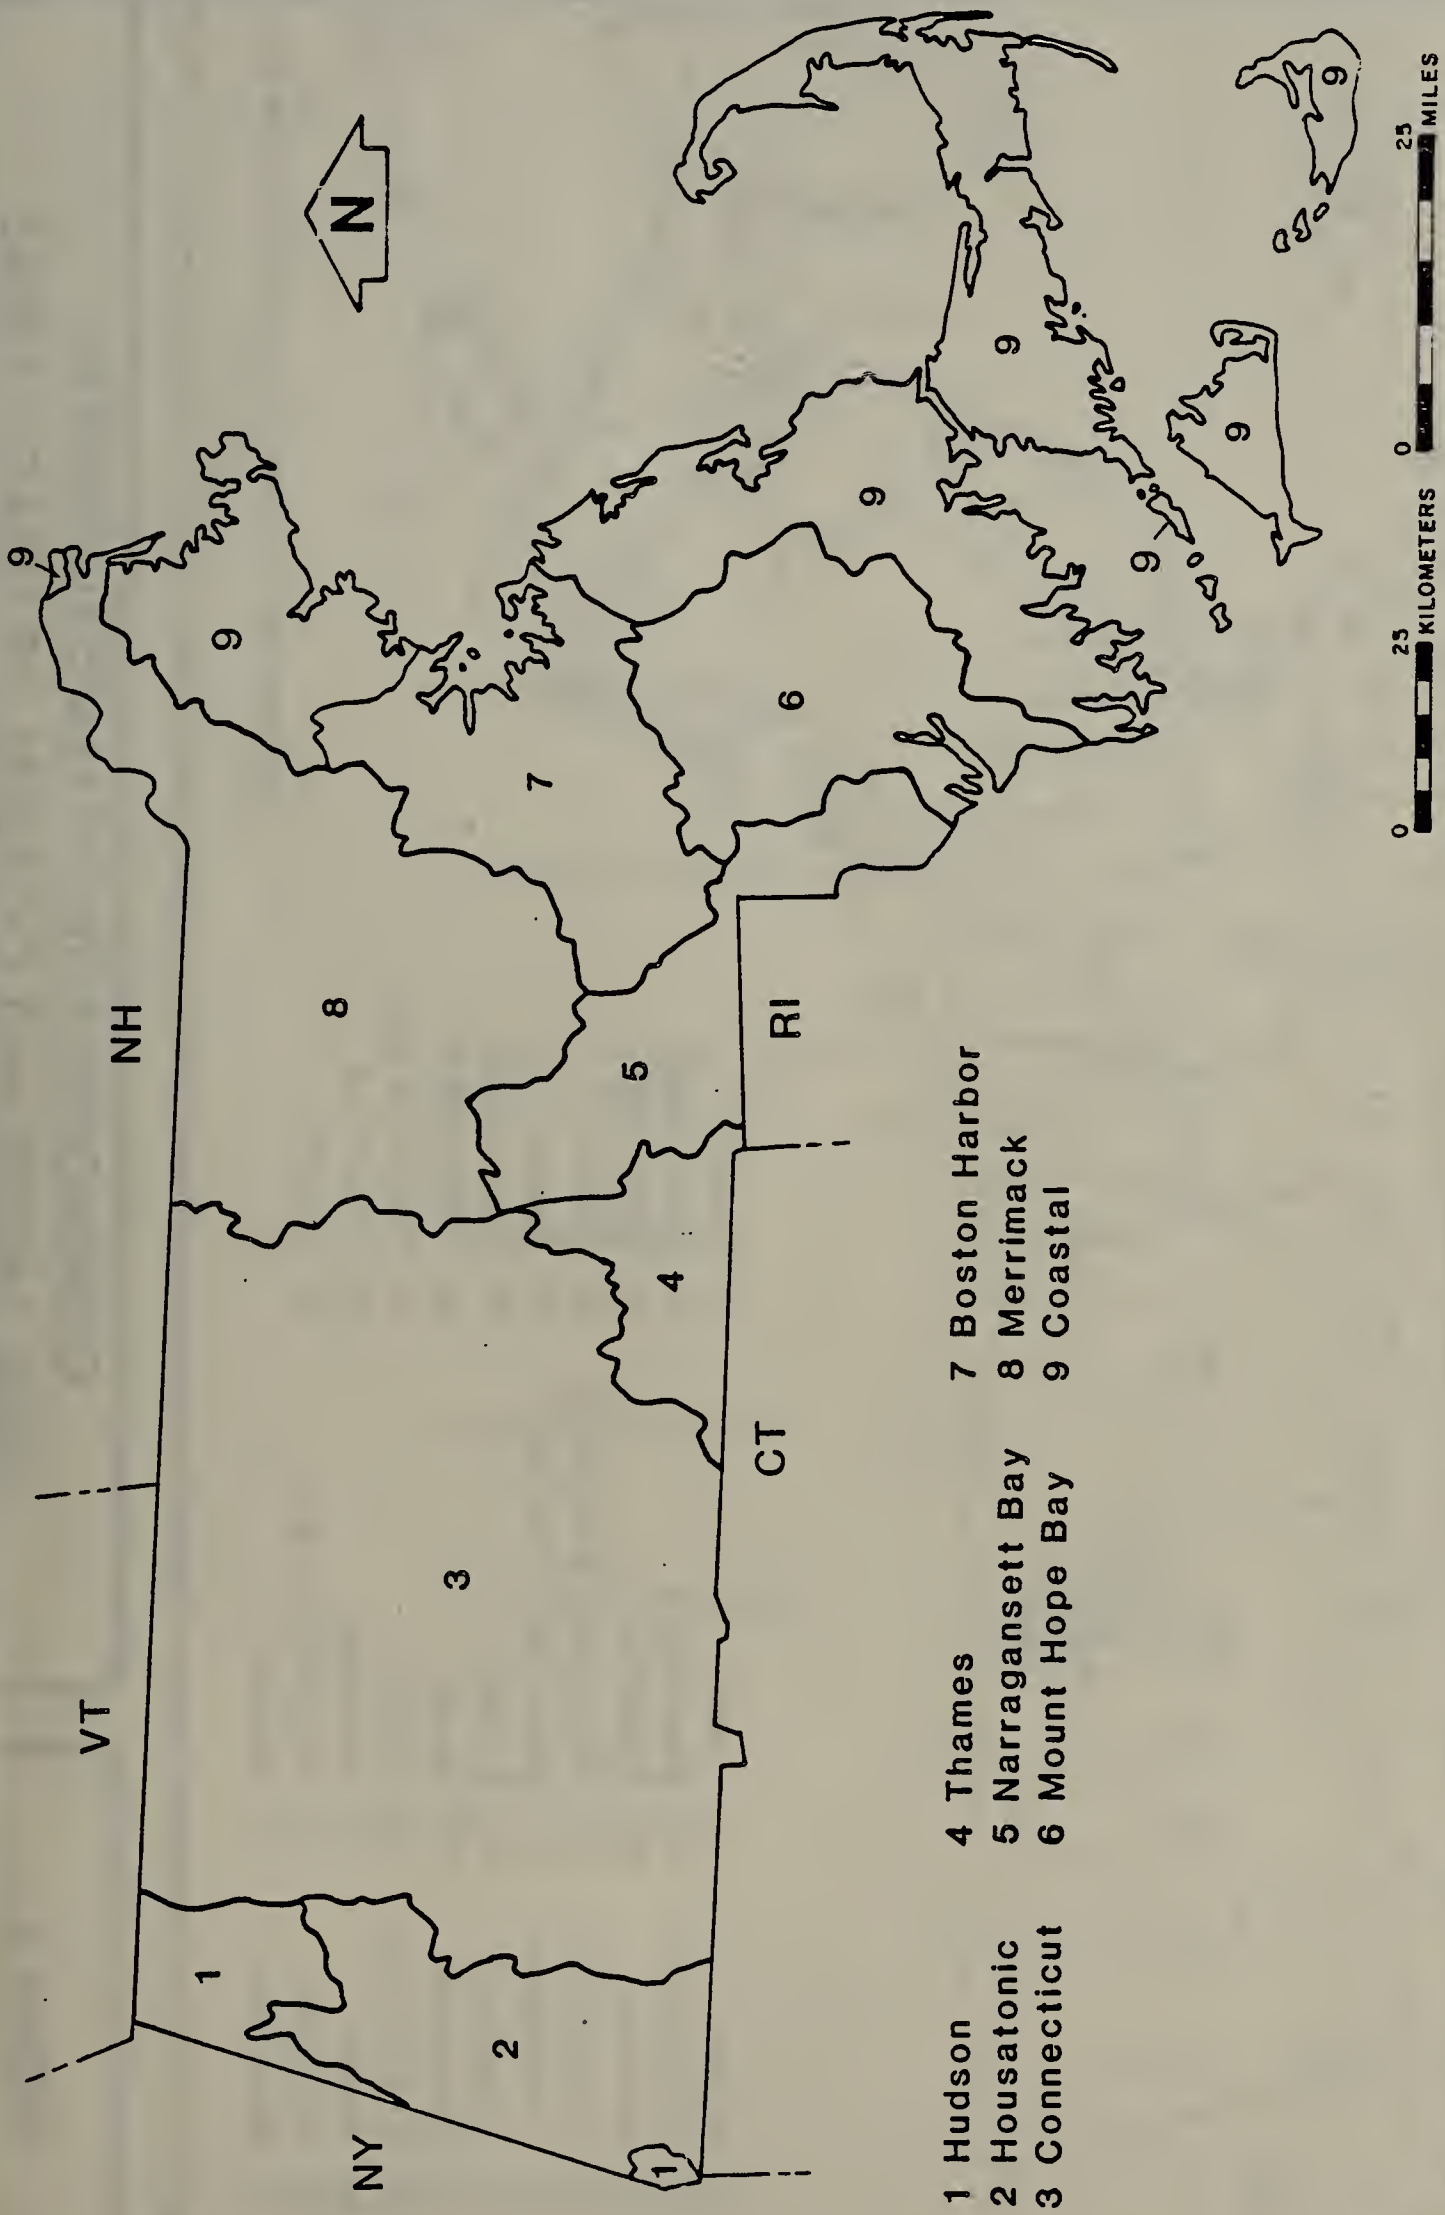

The Massachusetts Clean Lakes Program is currently undertaking many types of water quality investigations on a large number of waterbodies throughout the Commonwealth. In addition, there is a large body of data already being handled from previously completed water quality investigations. As a concerted effort to both improve and streamline the information management from these investigations this compilation report has been revised from a previous compilation report (Commonwealth of Massachusetts, 1984). This revision should provide an up-to-date desk reference which provides ready access to pertinent preliminary information and data access codes on the various waterbodies of Massachusetts. Future revisions of this document are planned so that new data may be incorporated into the report along with additional cross references which will allow even easier access to information on individual waterbodies. It is intended that this document be used as a standard for the names and locations of the many waterbodies in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. However, the listing of a waterbody name (ex. pond or lake) in no way means that a particular waterbody meets the terms or definitions of that name as used by other agencies.

PROCEDURE

This document is generally used to ascertain several items of preliminary information concerning the waterbodies in Massachusetts. Individual waterbodies are listed alphabetically within each river basin and coastal drainage area. The hydrological division of the state into nine drainage systems (Figure 1) comprising 32 river basins and coastal drainage areas (Figure 2) uses a system previously developed by Halliwell, Kimball, and Screpetis (1982). Several items can be extracted directly from the individual waterbody listings and these include: the name of a waterbody; its common name(s); whether the waterbody has more than one distinct basin [in square brackets]; the municipality where the waterbody is located; its PALIS data access number; whether the waterbody is known as a Great Pond (asterisk following the PALIS number, also see Appendix 2); the latitude and longitude of the approximate center of the waterbody (if available); the acreage (if determined); the USGS topographic quadrangle (7.5 minute series) code numbers (see Appendix 1); and the year of the survey by MDWPC (if applicable). If individual surveys were conducted in separate years then those years are separated by a slash (ex. 78/79). If a long term study with many surveys was conducted over the period of more than one year then those years are hyphenated (ex. 78-79). In addition, both the drainage system and river basin in which the waterbody is located can also be extracted from the first and second digits of the PALIS data access number (see Figures 1 and 2) which represent, respectively, the drainage system and river basin code numbers. The individual river basin figure which precedes each table of waterbody listings can also give pertinent information such as adjoining river basin and coastal drainage area divides, municipal and state boundaries (see Figure 3 for Map Symbols), and the approximate location of the watershed within the state (inset on figure).

Users should make special note that individual waterbody listings are presented alphabetically in groupings by river basin and coastal drainage area. If the river basin or coastal drainage area for a given waterbody is not known, but the city or town is known, a waterbody listing can usually be found by first using Appendix 3 to determine which river basin a particular municipality lies within. Turning to the page number given in Appendix 3 for that particular city or town should provide the proper river basin listing where a particular waterbody can be found.

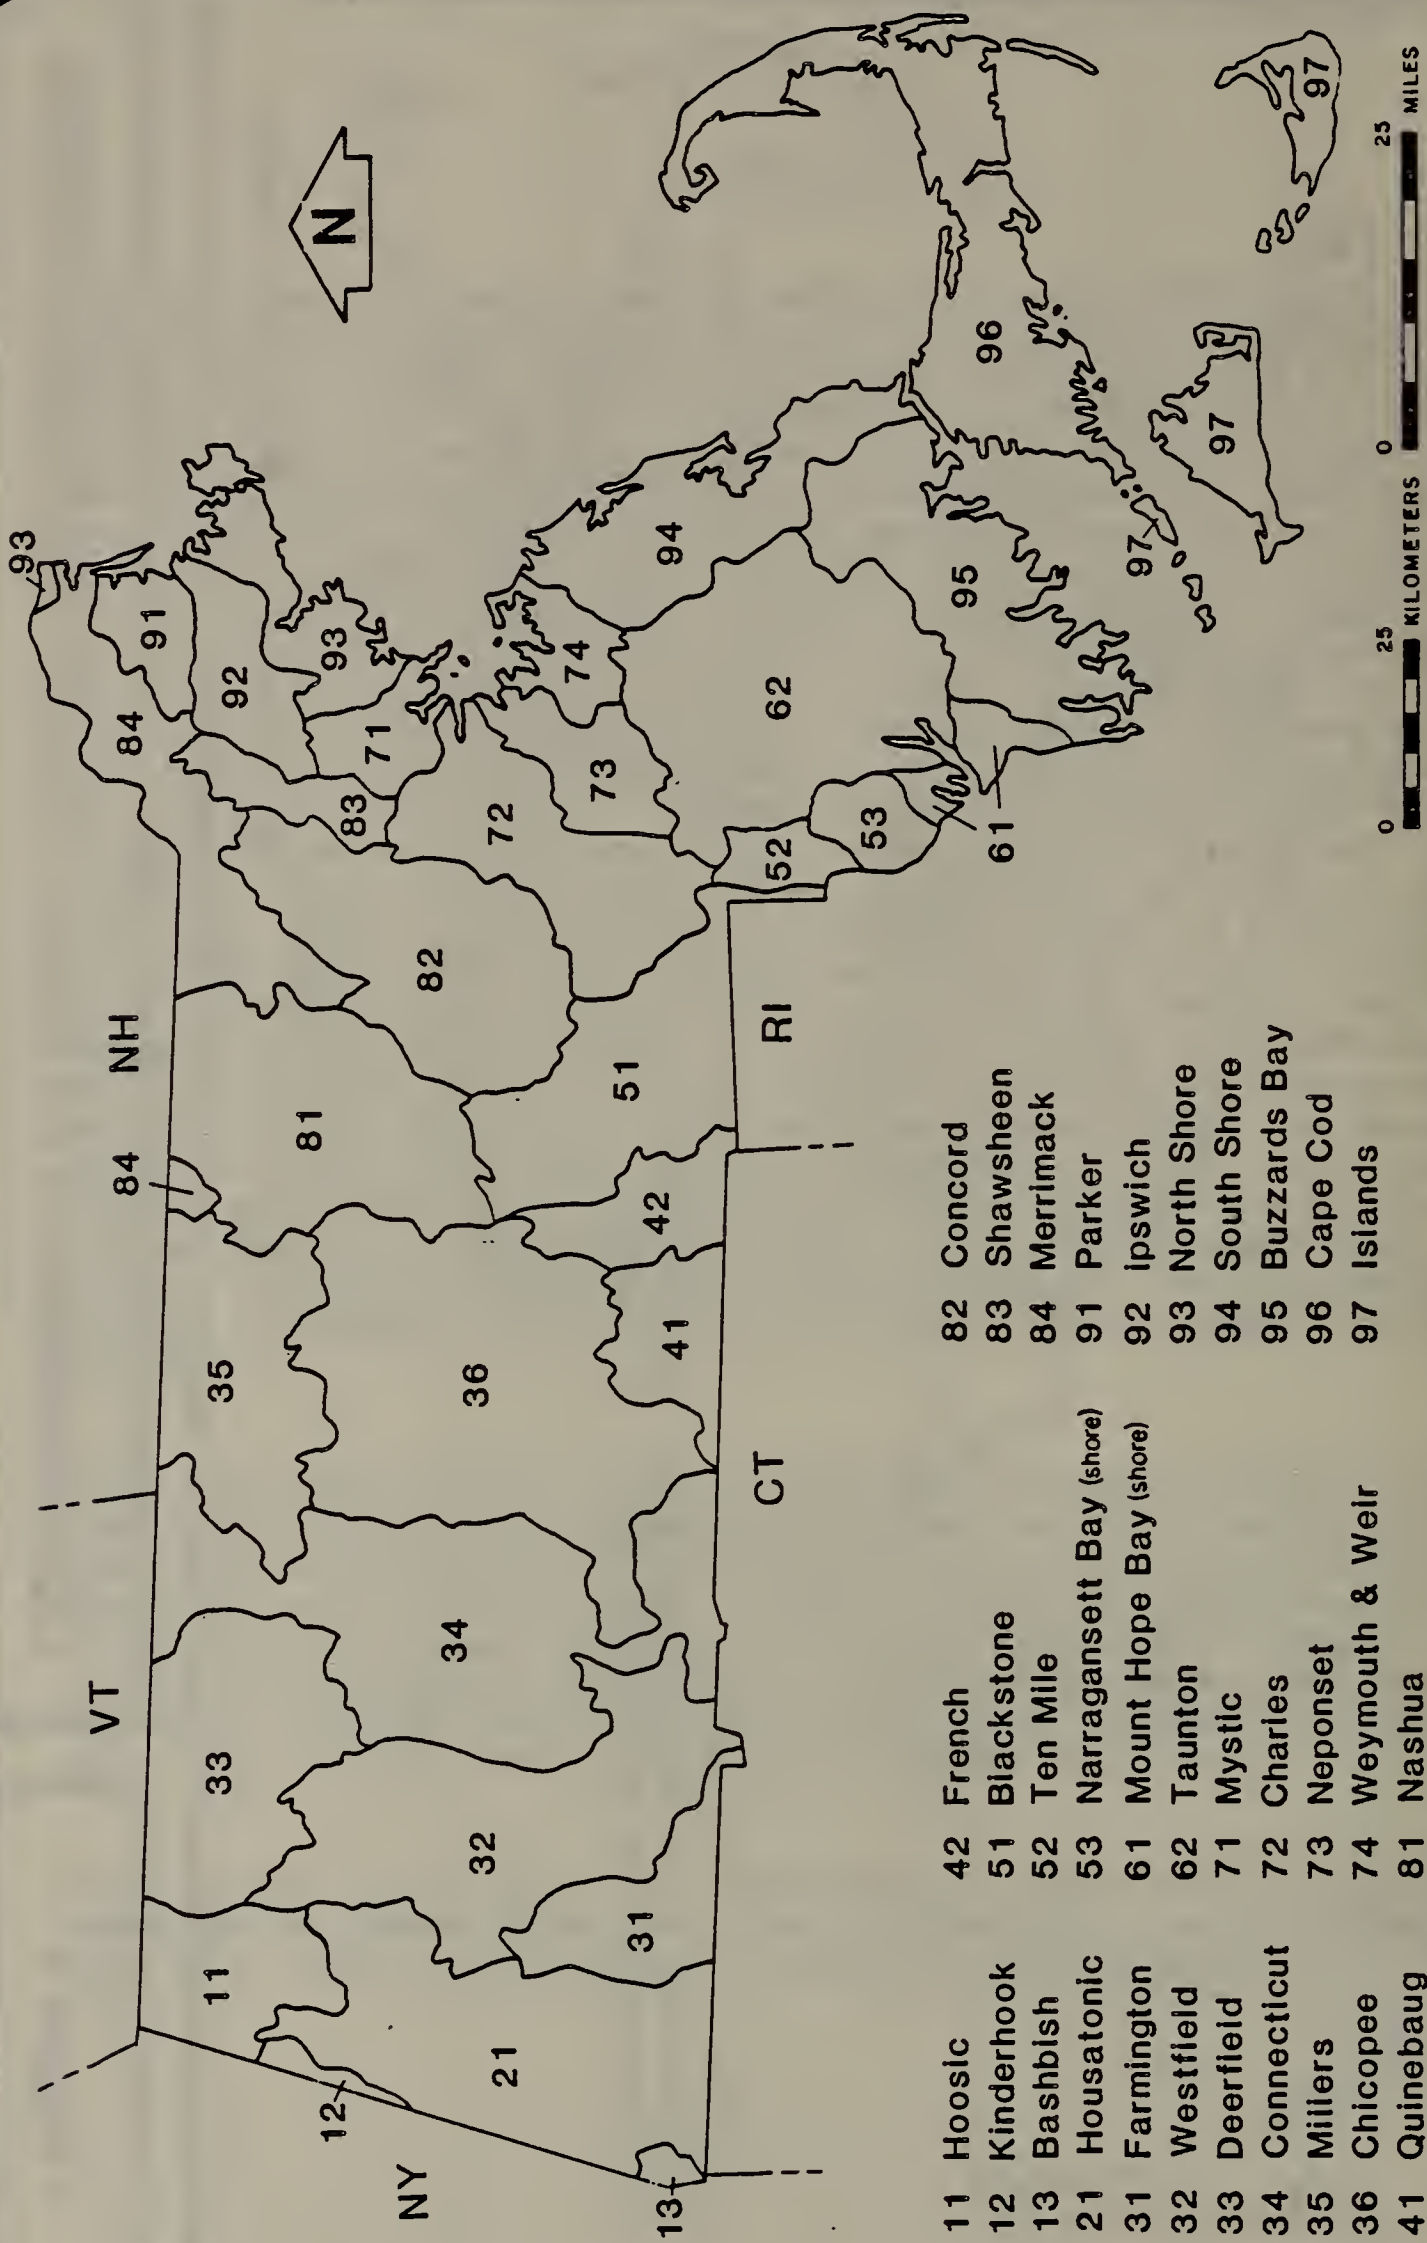

Users should also be aware that waterbodies are often known by several names and the common names listed for the waterbodies (in parentheses) may need to be searched through before a particular waterbody listing can be found.

GREAT PONDS OF MASSACHUSETTS¹

Colony Ordinance of 1641-47, "inhabitants of West Roxbury v. Stoddard," 89 Mass. 158, 171.

1. Great ponds, containing more than ten acres, which were not before the year 1647 appropriated to private persons, were by the colony ordinance made public, to lie in common for public use.
2. This ordinance applied to all these ponds, whether at that time included within the territory granted to a town or to any body of proprietors for the plantation of a town, or not then granted by the government of Colony, if they had not then been appropriated to particular persons, either by the freemen of the town or by the general court.
3. Fishing, fowling, boating, bathing, skating, or riding upon the ice, taking water for domestic or agricultural purposes or for use in the arts, and the cutting and taking of ice, are lawful and free upon these ponds, to all persons who own lands adjoining them or can obtain access to them without trespass, so far as they do not interfere with reasonable use of the ponds by others, or with the public right, unless in other cases where the legislature have otherwise directed.
4. ...And the towns may regulate the use of the ponds by reasonable by-laws, adopted and approved according to the statute...

A Great pond is a pond of the area specified in the ordinance and created by the natural formation of the land. The control of the great ponds in the public interest is vested in the legislature, but this does not mean that the public rights are inviolate. The legislature may regulate and change the public rights, or take them away altogether to serve some paramount interest.

By statute (1869, Ch. 384) the legislature relinquished the public right of access for the purpose of fishing in great ponds of less than twenty acres, if the entire shoreline is in private ownership.

All public rights in natural great ponds can be lawfully exercised in any part of the waters which are impounded by dams erected at the outlet of great ponds containing more than ten acres, except the public rights of fishing, which right will be restricted to natural great ponds exceeding twenty acres in size.

Colony Ordinance of 1641-47:

--reserved to the Commonwealth title to natural ponds of more than ten acres, thus leaving lesser ponds to private ownership. The public therefore have no rights to such ponds.
